Friends of Capt. Capers here among the Republicans are worried that he should upon his return to South Carolina take the position that he would not eas dinner with Judson Lyons at a banquet to the national committee of which Lyons is a member. Lyons is a political power here. The president regards him most highly, and haved regards him most highly and he and his wife are always invited to the White House receptions. Despite the fact that some s authern congressmen leve the White House reception men leve-the White House reception last winter at sight of Lyons and his wife and several negro friends, "Jud-son Lyons and wife" are still on the invitation list and will again be invited this winter. In addition Lyons is a close friend and supporter of Sena-tor Hanna. Republicans assert that whether he attended the banquet or say that if senator Hanna thought Lyons good enough to be asked they are confident Mr. Capers would not have objected to eating with him. Lyons' refusal to discuss the matter leads Capt. Capers' friends to fear that the negro is somewhat hurt that

The following about the hero of the Battle of Cowpens, printed under the Winchester, Va., dateline in last Sunday's Baltimore American, may prove of interest to our readers, most espeolally those who are at all familiar with the Revolutionary war history of South Carolina. The grave in which the ashes of the gallant soldier repose is not neglected. however, but the turf around it is kept smooth and green, and the spot is one of the first pointed out to strangers visisting the cemetery, and, though no marble or granite shaft rises over the last resting place of the hero, his deeds are as familiar to and his memory as proudly cherished by Americans as if they were recorded in enduring brass and bronze over the place of his interment. The truth of this is shown by a fact which does not seem to be generally known outside of a narrow circle about Spartanburg,

In the centre of that town stands a monument erected apparently as a sentennial commemoration of the Battle of Cowpens, which is surmounted. by a bronze statue of Gen. Morgan, of heroic size. This monument has a square base of granite resting on a broad granite subbase, from which rises a granite column on which stands the statue. The inscriptions on this monument are exceedingly interesting and tell the story of its erection in terse, but graphic, language. These inscriptions cover the front, sides and back of the base and subbase.

Those on the front are as follows:

"Tis the time of year for the open hand And the tender heart and true, When a fift of heaven has cleft the skies All And the saints are looking through." The flaine leaps high where the heart was drea And sorrow til eyes grow bright, For a message dear that all may hear Was borne on the Chrisumas light. Walker, president.

Tis the time of year for the cordial word.
And the grace of the lifted load.
For brother to come to brother a help.
On the rough and stony road.
Tis time to bury the ancient hate,
And to make the quarrels up;
No gradge has room where the roses bloom.
Round the Christmas loving cup.

Tis the time of year for children's joy,

The the mirch of Constants day.

This the time of year for sweet surprise;

For the blessing we did not see,
Though straight from the infinite love of Go
'Twas coming to you and me.

The sheen of the Bethlehem star,
And for knee ing fain, with the age-long train
Where the Bate and Mary are.

Tis the time of year for the loving cup,
When the holly berries shine,
And with shout and song of man and maid
The cedar and fir we twine.
All pass the cup from the frozen North
To the South where the robin sings,
For a pulse of clieer to the waning year
The merry Ch istmas brings.
